Dear Friends:

Sunday afternoon was cold and windy. When Rose Netca stopt in, we put fresh water on the stove for Tinga Tea, and in five minutes the air was heartwarming. Rose sat on the church pew over by the bulletin board; one of us sat on the kitchen stool; and another on a little old bench by the stove.

"There's something cozy about a kitchen", Rose said, when we suggested going into the other room where the chairs were more comfortable. So we stayed where we were and talked about tea. "You have never tasted herb tea, Rose? Not even Rose Hip Tea, whose name you bear? It is our next - next favorite beverage, the next favorite being goat milk, of course. Rose Hip tea is made with the bright red hips (the seed pods) of the wild rose. All summer long, the rose hips absorb the "vitamic" rays of the sun, and by fall their scarlet flesh is saturated with ascorbic acid."

We sipt Tinga Tea with sesame cookies, in the quiet dusk of day, first plain, then with a little honey.

"I think I like it better with honey", Rose said. "What herbs are there in Tinga Tea?" "Well, there are some common herbs of the wayside and the meadow, like St. Johnswort, yarrow, plantain and raspberry leaves, and cultivated herbs like lemon balm and peppermint, and many others." Tinga Tea was created by the newest member of our farm family, Heinz Grotzke, who came to America from Stuttgart, Germany, with Inez, his wife, and Michael, their son. Their golden-haired little girl, Ingrid, was born here. Heinz is a Bio-Dynamic farmer, and a seed and soil expert, and in 1962 his seeds and soil and fresh vegetables will be on the market.

A few flattened summer squash still brighten the brown field in front of the house. The wind blows freely through the empty apple trees. Their tight-budded limbs frame the longest and blackest compost pile ever to be built on the farm. Billions of soil bacteria are at work, converting the raw material into fine soil to replenish the land.

As the days shorten and the evenings lengthen, intersperse your indoor hours with a cup of Tinga Tea, or a cup of Rose Hip Tea, in the cozy atmosphere of your kitchen, or the warmth of your fireside.

Sincerely,

MITTIE ARNOLD, MARGARET THOMAS
and "Family"

Tea Herbs, Salad Herbs, Thyme, A Harvest of Peace, Grace
Thy House, Herb Wreath.

TINGA TEAS - (SW - 1#).....(see varieties and prices below)

Tinga Teas are herbal blends of roots, leaves, blossoms or seeds of cultivated and wild herbs. From the beginning of time, mankind has been using herbs of the field and the wayside for his well-being to help his circulation, his nerves and his digestion. In the proper proportion, Tinga Teas contain anise, lemon balm, berry leaves, fennel, hyssop, marigold, mint, mullein, nettle, plantain, rosemary, sage and St. John'swort, thyme, sweet woodruff and yarrow.

- - - METHOD of FARMING - - -

In 1946, a Rhode Island physician visited our gardens and asked to see our compost piles. We didn't have any compost piles to show him. He introduced us to the bio-dynamic method of farming. Since then we have practiced natural farming, and our goal has been, "Return more to the land than you reap. Maintain a good balance of nature."

Poisonous sprays, insecticides, and minerals treated with sulphuric acid are taboo. Tons of compost are spread on the land. Household garbage, garden and lawn trimmings, old hay, are composted and returned to the land. Slow acting minerals such as ground limestone, phosphate rock, greensand, granite meal are used in composting soil..

FRESH VEGETABLES

Since we are growing vegetables for seed, there will be a limited supply of fresh vegetables in season. Crops which can be stored like potatoes and carrots and a few others, will be available. Fresh vegetables can be had at the farm only.

B.D. COMPOST

Long piles of bio-dynamically treated manure are already working, generating a gentle warmth, and turning into compost. By spring it will be fine compost. Most of this will be the food for our spring plants, but a certain amount is set aside for the home gardener, who wishes to give his lawn, plants, and trees the best in plant food and soil. The B.D. Compost starter used in the production of this soil, will be offered for sale in the spring.

BIO-DYNAMIC VEGETABLE SEEDS - 1962

The Bio-dynamic grown vegetable seeds received very favorable response from home-gardeners last year. We have enlarged production and increased the varieties.

All of this year's seed was grown at Golden Acres Farm on soils composted for many years. The plants were never sprayed nor dusted with any of the commercially sold chemical insecticides or fungicides. We believe the plant is naturally healthy and that it can be kept in this state by proper methods of breeding, growing, fertilization and cultivation. Bio-dynamic methods govern the seed-growing and the treatment.

The quality of the seed is checked by standard germination tests. The vitality factor is tested by the Biochemical Research Laboratory, Threefold Farm, Spring Valley, New York, by producing a chromatogram for each seed variety. This method is described in the quarterly, Bio-Dynamics, #50 and #54.

DESCRIPTION of SEED VARIETIES

- BEAN "TENDERGREEN" - This is a bush type stringless bean, selected for its dependable production. The pods are round and tender and excellent for freezing. The dry white bean seeds are good in soups and stews.
- CANTALOUPE "BANANA" - So named because it resembles a big banana. The flesh is deep yellow, and has a delicious flavor, and also makes a fine frozen dessert. Many "Banana" grow to two feet in length.
- CUCUMBER "GOLDEN ACRES" - Belongs in every home garden, for an all year supply. The plants are vigorous and productive.
- KALE "SIBERIAN" - Is a fast growing variety for fall and winter crop. Plants are frost resistant and continue producing in spring. Leaves, curly and tender. Excellent for a green manure or cover crop, and early spring pasture. (4 lbs. seed per acre).
- PEPPER "PENNWONDER" - Is a real success. The seeds germinate extremely fast and produce vigorous, healthy plants. Peppers are ready by the end of July. Fruits are three and four lobed, and have a thick, sweet meat. They are tasty enough to be eaten like an apple, especially when they turn red.
- PUMPKIN "CHEYENNE BUSH" - This is the pumpkin for the homegardener with a limited space. The plant is compact, without spreading vines. Fruits average 3 to 5 pounds, just right for a pumpkin pie.
- RADISH "ICICLE" - Is known for its crisp, tender, long white roots. Stands hot weather, without losing its fine flavor.
- SQUASH "BUTTERNUT" - A favorite winter squash, it is reliable both in yield and quality. The dry meat is deep yellow and sweet. Stores very well.
- SWEETCORN "GOLDEN BANTAM" - An open-pollinated yellow corn. The ears average 8 inches in length, and have 12 rows of good sized kernels. Excellent for freezing. For continuous supply, plant every two weeks.
- TOMATO "VALIANT" - This strain has been completely re-vitalized and is now an all-season bearer, producing the earliest crop as well as the latest. The fruit is round, fine textured, delicious in flavor, and is an all-purpose tomato. All plants are wire-trained.
- TOMATO "RUTGERS" - The well-known late variety, begins producing about two weeks later than Valiant. After maturity it continues to produce in abundance until frost.
- WATERMELON "NEW HAMPSHIRE MIDGET" - An early ice box melon, preferred for its sweetness and earliness. A reliable producer, even under severe conditions.
- WATERMELON "RHODE ISLAND RED" - An early type melon. Fruits weigh between 8 and 20 pounds. When fully ripe, the meat is sweet and juicy, and dark red. The vines are vigorous and productive.
- SUNFLOWER "MAMMOUTH RUSSIAN" - This standard variety serves as a windbreak for many crops. Height 10 feet. Grown in rows, it retards weeds. A good seed for the birds.
- B.D. COMPOST STARTER - This is a concentrated mixture of soil and humus-forming organisms which accelerate the decomposition of all organic wastes. Home-gardeners, who make their own compost piles, will be pleased with the results of the B.D. Compost Starter. Instructions included with each purchase.
